Hi
Im writting with my concern about the salmon industry being too toxic to the environment. The over stocking of fish pens, is cruel and causes mass pollution to the marine environment.
The use of antibiotics and there effects, to other marine life. It also tarnishes our image of a green and clean place. I was aware that the crayfish industry was affected, by this, and some markets didnt want our crays, due to the antibiotics contanimation. Thats a concern for people working in that industry.
I also note that the general public have had to put up with beaches being polutted by fish parts washing up on the shore. My vote would be for better practice. Smaller scale, a cleaner and more cohesive industry, that fits better for all Tasmanians. Its also a concern that these companies are foreign owned and maybe dont even pay tax.
Thank you
Angie Flynn
